

Moulding Practice in Light of Theory: Socialism with African Characteristics

A Publication of the Socialist Workers Movement of Kenya

KIGODA

KIGODA is the ideological and theoretical organ of the Socialist Workers Movement of Kenya. It is not a neutral platform, but a revolutionary tool designed to analyze, critique, and advance socialist theory and praxis—rooted in Marxism-Leninism and shaped by Kenya's material realities.

Our Purpose

We publish with a clear ideological-political commitment. This journal is not simply a repository of the Movement's theses. Rather, it is a living contribution to the popularization and development of Marxist-Leninist theory, aimed at:

- Deepening ideological clarity,
- Strengthening revolutionary practice, and
- Advancing the global class struggle.

We engage with modern developments in capitalism and imperialism through a scientific socialist lens, and we seek to contribute to the re-organisation of the international communist and labor movement.

Our Mission

We aim to foster an unrestricted exchange of revolutionary ideas, grounded in Marxist-Leninist principles. While we may differ tactically or strategically from other movements, we unite in theory to push forward the intellectual reconstruction of global socialism.

Our focus is on:

- Defending the Marxist-Leninist party model in an era of capitalist co-option,
 - Reinforcing the central role of the working class in the transition from capitalism to socialism,
 - Resisting the ideological capture of communist parties by liberalism, reformism, or nationalism,
 - Promoting international dialogue on the future of the communist movement.

Against Opportunism and Imperialism

In an age of global crisis and mass inequality, capitalism is proving its historical limitations. The collapse of neoliberal promises and the intensifying class contradictions globally remind us of the continued relevance of Karl Marx's *Capital.

To address contemporary phenomena such as digital currency, surveillance capitalism, and new imperialist formations, we uphold the Marxist-Leninist critique—not as dogma, but as a revolutionary guide to action.

We take a firm stand against:

- Social democracy that seeks to soften capitalism,
 - Revisionism and reformism that dilute revolutionary goals,
 - Liberal and cosmopolitan ideologies serving capitalist hegemony,
 - Imperialist institutions such as the IMF, NATO, and the EU,
 - Nationalist deviations that obscure class struggle.

Socialism with African Characteristics

Our analysis is rooted in Kenya's historical and current class contradictions. We examine the effects of capitalism and imperialism on Kenyan workers, peasants, and the broader African continent. In doing so, we advocate for a socialism that emerges from African struggles, rather than imported models.

We draw inspiration from:

- The Paris Commune and the October Revolution,
- The Communist International,
- The socialist experiences of the USSR and other states,

- Kenya's own resistance history—from anti-colonial revolts to contemporary workers' movements.

Information, Communication, and Resistance

We recognize the dual role of media and digital technologies in Kenya. While often tools of state surveillance and capitalist propaganda, they also provide new platforms for resistance, education, and organization. We aim to critically analyze these tools as part of the wider class struggle.

Our Aims

- Promote socialist ideas, experiences, and world outlooks,
 - Raise consciousness about Kenya's class conflicts and contradictions,
 - Reveal the damage caused by capitalism and imperialism to Kenya and the world,
 - Support the struggles of the working class, peasants, and laboring communities,
 - Encourage internationalist solidarity, especially across Africa and the Global South,
 - Critically assess the role of information and communication politics in society.

The revolutionary transformation of society demands both theory and action.

KIGODA is a platform for critical thought, ideological struggle, and revolutionary imagination.

We invite comrades, thinkers, and workers to engage with us, challenge us, and help build the scientific socialist future our world urgently needs.
